

Greetings! I am Errol Mabusela, a proud resident of Ivory Park in the vibrant city of Johannesburg. Being the youngest among my siblings, I was nurtured in an environment that fostered curiosity and a love for diverse interests.

From my early days, I immersed myself in a tapestry of hobbies, ranging from literature to sports, visual arts to performing arts. A dreamer at heart, I envisioned myself on the big screen or creating masterpieces like Picasso. The stage became a canvas where I painted poetry and acted my way to numerous awards.

As the chapters of life unfolded, my interests broadened to include nature, technology, the great outdoors, and the thrill of exploration. Serving as a Service Consultant at Capitec Bank, my role has amplified my passion for connecting with people, both socially and professionally.

I proudly hold a degree in Accounting from the University of Johannesburg, where I actively engaged in initiatives focused on education and awareness of HIV/AIDS. Giving back to my community, I volunteered my Bookkeeping skills to local NGOs, aligning my actions with the belief that positive change begins at home.

Now, as I gaze toward the future, I find myself drawn to the realm of coding—a skill I consider pivotal in navigating the fourth industrial revolution. With a foundation rooted in creativity, curiosity, and enthusiasm, I seek a career that not only allows me to express these qualities but also contributes to global progress.

Joining the technology industry has long been a dream, driven by the prospect of daily problem-solving and the application of critical thinking. Beyond personal fulfilment, I recognize that this sought-after career ensures job security in an ever-evolving landscape.

In this journey of exploration and evolution, I am poised to embrace the challenges and triumphs that coding and technology will undoubtedly bring. Together, let's shape a future where passion meets purpose, and innovation becomes second nature.
